LAST CASE AT A BAGGAGE AUCTION

Joey Third wins an old suitcase from a baggage auction, but the record player it holds within opens a cursed portal to a frozen realm of eternity.

New York, NY, July 1, 2020—Last Case at a Baggage Auction is the latest thrilling and beautifully poignant story to be released by award-winning author Eric J. Guignard, presented here by Harper Day Books in author's preferred text and gracefully illustrated by artist Steve Lines.

1963 Detroit is a hotbed of gambling, and the weekly baggage auctions keep a busy trade. Charlie Stewart and Joey Third are skilled in the art of successful bidding, but when Joey lands a mysterious suitcase, the thrill of winning turns to terror once they realize they've opened something sinister.

Inside the suitcase is an antique gramophone, and the music it plays is unlike anything they've heard before. A chanting voice speaks to them in strange words, evoking visions of a dark, frozen land. It's a voice that makes them sick with addiction, and it continues chanting in their heads even when the record stops playing.

Charlie sets out to solve the mystery of the unholy music and how to turn it off forever. But the urge to listen grows stronger, and the more it plays, the more the aural virus spreads, until people begin to vanish . . . feeding an apparition that seeks immortality.
